

Boulder Dog Food Company recalls Turkey Sprinkles due to possible salmonella

By Mitchell Byars Staff Writer

Updated: 07/02/2015 12:20:25 PM MDT

DailyCamera.com

Boulder Dog Food Company's Turkey Sprinkles

Boulder Dog Food Company has issued a voluntary recall of its Turkey Sprinkles product due to possible salmonella contamination just weeks after the company issued a similar recall on its Chicken Sprinkles product.

According to a news release from the company, a routine sampling program by the Food and Drug Administration revealed a positive test for salmonella.

The recalled batch consists of seven bags distributed in Colorado and Virginia. The recalled 3 ounce Turkey Sprinkles have a "best by" dates of May 18, 28 and 30 of 2016, and are from lot 743 and UPD code 899883001224.

Anyone in possession of a recalled bag should return it to the retailer where they purchased it or to Boulder Dog Food Company, 2828 30th St.

Both animals that eat a product with salmonella and people who handle the product could become sick. Symptoms of salmonella in pets include lethargy, diarrhea, fever and vomiting. Sick pets may also have decreased appetite, fever and abdominal pain. Pets that consumed this product and have these symptoms should be taken to the veterinarian immediately.

Boulder Dog Food Company said it has received one complaint from a consumer.

Mitchell Byars: 303-473-1329 303-473-1329, byarsm@dailycamera.com or twitter.com/mitchellbyars.